

Lori L. Taylor

Lori L. Taylor is an Associate Professor in the Bush School of Government and Public Service; a Program Area Leader for School Finance, Facilities and Organizations in the State of Texas Education Research Center at Texas A&M; and an Associate Professor in A&M's Department of Economics. She also currently serves as a Research Affiliate of the National Center on Performance Incentives at Vanderbilt University.

Dr. Taylor has written extensively on variations in the cost of education and recently developed a Comparable Wage Index for the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES). Her current projects explore differences in teacher quality between charter and traditional public schools, the impact of facilities on teacher turnover and school productivity, and the effects of performance pay in education. Her work on school finance issues has been published in The Review of Economics and Statistics, The Journal of Urban Economics, Economic Inquiry, Education Finance and Policy, The Journal of Education Finance, and the AEFA Yearbook. She is a former member of the American Education Finance Association's Board of Directors, and of the National Center for Education Statistics' Finance Technical Review Panel.

Dr. Taylor holds a B.A. in economics and a B.S. in Business Administration from the University of Kansas, and an M.A. and Ph.D. in economics from the University of Rochester.